How can I fix the Time Stopper 4.021 problem? A: A few ideas: Is the TimeStopper application launched? Try to re-launch it. To launch the application you should have the TimeStopperDesktop shortcut on your desktop. Check that the TimeStopper executable is in the PATH of your user. Another option: Go to Windows and type in cmd (or powershell if you have that) and run the TimeStopper executable. To conclude, check also that: The certificate is correct That the user has read permissions on the TimeStopper folder That the user has execution permissions on the TimeStopper folder That the user has read permissions on the TimeStopper.config file If you still cannot see the icons of the application on your desktop, check also that: You can find the icon for the application in: %APPDATA%\Microsoft\Windows\Start Menu\Programs %LOCALAPPDATA%\Microsoft\Windows\Start Menu\Programs and also check the registry: [HKEY_LOCAL_MACHINE\SOFTWARE\Microsoft\Windows\CurrentVersion\Explorer\TimeStopper\] [HKEY_CURRENT_USER\Software\Microsoft\Windows\CurrentVersion\Explorer\TimeStopper\] That the program's start icon is on the desktop. A successful head transplant procedure in a primate can have dramatic consequences for a human recipient, for example, restoring the victim of an accident to his or her previous normal state. In the short term, the recipient may find it difficult to control the transplanted head, but will adjust and quickly become used to this new state. In the long term, as with any major surgical operation, a large number of complications can arise. In the case of a head transplantation, some of the problems may arise from the physical mismatch between the donor and recipient, for example, mismatched blood types and vessel size. Other problems may arise from the difficulty in ensuring the transplanted head stays properly connected to the neck. The state of the art in head transplantation is shown, for example, in G. Bruns, "Head Transplantation—Technique and Results," Lancet, Vol. 353, No. 9178 (1999), which
