The anticancer drug-induced cellular necrosis has been correlated with cell proliferation rate. Based on our observations that food containing isoflavone had no effect on cell proliferation rate, we investigated the effect of genistein (GEN) on the inhibitory effect of anticancer drugs on cell proliferation and cell cycle of SGC-7901 cells. Cell proliferation and viability was detected by MTT assay. The cell cycle was determined by flow cytometry. Apoptotic cells were detected by PI staining and flow cytometry. In the genistein group, the concentrations of EGF which induced a 50% proliferation of SGC-7901 cells were higher than those of the control group, the concentrations of anticancer drugs which induced 50% inhibition of cell proliferation were lower than those of the control group. Apoptotic cells in the genistein group were significantly increased than those in the control group. It was suggested that GEN could inhibit the inhibitory effect of anticancer drugs on cell proliferation and the cell cycle. All Transition Rays clips start with a placeholder clip A. Clip B is setup as a live effect. During a scene switch from clip A to B the effect is disabled and clip A gets replaced with the effect. Clip A is setup as a clip source and scene switch between clips with the help of the Transition Rays effect. Clips C, D and E are setup as clips that you can make the ray source visible with the 'Ray Source Visible' transition. I hope this will help. If you have any questions, please, feel free to ask. Credits: The Transition Rays was made by Charles Coon, but he uploaded it to the internet and gave it to me. I'm very thankful for that. Helpful resources: Channels in Transition Rays are needed for even more flexible Ray Sources. Here are some: Ray Sources by Adrian Cooney Part 1: Part 2: Another Horrible Week for Sugar Profiteering For years we've been hearing from sugar companies and their powerful lobbying arm, the American Sugar Alliance (ASA), that we should cut sugar consumption to improve public health. But those claims of public health benefits—combined with the knowledge that sugar's harmful effects are only now being investigated—are not borne out by the available evidence. Unfortunately, they weren't borne out in the just-concluded 81st annual meeting of the American Diabetes Association, where the ADA paid big money for sponsorship to peddle unhealthy products in its exhibit hall. Here are highlights from a collection of posts on the ADA's sugar shill website. An exhibitor at the ADA meeting's stand sold "(1) sugar coated candies and cookies, (2) sugar coated bread and rolls, (3) sugar coated peanut butter, (4) sugar coated cheese and chocolate snacks, and (5) sugar coated baby food." And there were some sugary drinks. "Two of the three new Coca-Cola products available in the ADA exhibit had significant amounts of added sugar. They were Coca-Cola with FROST and Coca-Cola with BANANA with FROST. The sugar content was between 21 and 37 grams of added sugar per 12 ounce bottle." Many exhibitors weren't even trying to hide their products' sugar content. "Kellogg

What's New In Transition Rays?

Transition Rays is an Adobe Premiere transition that adds a light ray effect to your scene switches. In Transition Rays while brighter areas of scene A become transparent, rays of light of a fictive light source behind scene A are shining through those transparent areas. The amount of light increases until scene A is completely covered by the color of light. While covered, scene switches from A to B and effect reverses. Usage: 1. Add Effect: Select an effect and choose Transition Rays from the Type dropdown. 2. Style: Select the style of the effect and choose an Angle from the Angle dropdown. The default is Relative To Camera. Select Offset From Selection to move the effects position away from the camera or use Offset From Screen to have the effect off screen. 3. Color: Choose a Color and select a Ramp From Background to have rays emitted from a fictive light source behind scene A. Ramp can also be set as a Fade In / Fade Out Ramp. 4. Fade Out: Select a Ramp From Background to have rays emitted from a fictive light source behind scene B. */ var mod = { name: 'Transition Rays', author: '', version: '', description: '', license: '', copyright: '', comments: [], me: '', tags: [], res: { main: '', bk: '', data: [] }, js: [], sm: [], mv: [], mk: [], mh: [], mo: [] }, forEach = [].forEach, addDefault = function(cb) { this.js.push(cb); }, add = function(c) { mod.comments.push(c); this.js.push(c); }, get = function(i) { return this.js[i]; }, create = function(cb) { this.create_js.push(cb);
